CHIPS.

Langtry, like Patti, lives in her special car wherever she goes.

J. A. Maynes & Co., HERALD Block, have No. 282 of the Bow Ball Novelty.

Gerald Massey lectures to-night at the Liberal Institute on "Man in Search of his Soul."

The Jersey Lily appears at the Salt Lake Theatre to-night as Julia, in "The Hunchback."

The Utah Central brought down quite a heavy passenger train Wednesday morning.

The morning Utah Central train to this city was a little late on Wednesday. Delay on the U. P. was the cause.

If you will go to a circus take it in the first night; don't give them a chance to take you in on the last performance.

On motion of Arthur Brown Robert S. Spence, of Paris, Idaho, was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Utah yesterday.

Owing to the washouts on the Oregon Short Line, the Utah and Northern is held over in Ogden two hours to catch northbound passengers.

There were three drunks and some other small cases in the police court yesterday, several old stagers in the police drama appearing on the scene.

Messrs. Van Horne and Snider have strained every nerve to save their client Hopt, but with such a bad case it is surprising they have been able to save him so long.

James Ferguson has had a telephone placed in his saddle horse stables so that those wishing good riding horses can communicate the fact without the trouble of going to the stables.

Deputies Sprague and Ferguson went to the pen yesterday to stand death watch over Welcome. They are to remain until the hour of execution, which will be between 11 and 2 o'clock to-morrow.

There was a terrible falling off in the attendance at Cole's circus last evening, and the performance was cut, chopped and mutilated to an unusual degree. The canvass did not cover one-fifth of the audience of the previous night.

A party of municipal dignitaries, including the Mayor and Recorder, rode up to Dry Canyon yesterday to inspect the water supply in that locality, and to lay out the course for a flume to conduct the waters to the Twentieth Ward ditch. They say water is plentiful.

The picnic to-day of the bouquet and straw hat club, will be sure to be a success. Boating, dancing and all sorts of games and amusements will be indulged in. Conveyances leave the Pavilion at 8 a.m. and 2 p.m.; You that are invited don't fail to be there.

Mrs. Wilson, the woman who was arrested on the charge of stealing money from a male companion, has been discharged, the complainant withdrawing the charge. Mrs. Wilson says she has hitherto enjoyed a reputation for honesty and proper conduct, and desires to preserve her character from suspicion.

The Pratt family reunion at Liberty Park yesterday called together about 200 members of the family and their friends. Among the latter were President John Taylor and Counselor D. H. Wells. The day was spent in feasting, speech-making and social enjoyments, and all returned to their homes last evening delighted with the reunion.

MRS. LANGTRY.

The Jersey Lily Draws the Fashion of Salt Lake.

Her Performance of Galatea.

What Two of The Herald's Critics Say of Her.

ONE OPINION.

There was growling all along the line when the announcement came out that Salt Lake was to be charged $1.50 for the privilege of whetting her curiosity with a view of the celebrated Langtry. Growl as we might, however, there were few of us who would forego the opportunity for the sake of the extra fee, and the hour for raising the curtain last evening at the Theatre, showed society in her fabled garb and in all her diversity of grades, colors and conditions, drawn up in critical array to pass judgment upon the Lily of the Jerseys. The sentiment of curiosity seemed to rage strongest down stairs, and to wane gradually as one ascended toward the ceiling. In the dollar-and-a-half region there was scarcely a seat left unoccupied, and at the opening standing room was in some demand; in the first circle, where the curious were required to deposit but a dollar, the attendance was beyond the average, but empty seats were much more frequent than below; the galleries seemed to have hesitated between Galatea and the Human Fly, with the other sensations congregated on the Square, and at length to have transferred their allegiance in a body to the latter; their numbers were few and undemonstrative. The whole house, by means of the increased charges, probably counted up in the neighborhood of $850—a tremendous result when the presence of so formidable a counter attraction is considered. Mrs. Langtry was not particularly known in Salt Lake until she chose to follow the profession of the stage; a few there were who followed fashionable events in the outside world, who knew that the lady was celebrated in another walk in life, from being known in London society as "a professional beauty," and from having won a very elevated position in English circles—in fact having associated intimately with a branch of royalty itself—by the main force of her personal charms; her appearance upon the boards was telegraphed throughout civilization; then followed her American engagement, the Gebhard episode, the evolution of Dudeism, and finally Mr. Gebhard's downfall—events which society followed with the most breathless attention, and events which resulted in placing Mrs. Langtry's name before the public with a prominence that Mary Anderson, or Clara Morris—with their years of toiling—have hardly been able to obtain. Mrs. Langtry made her debut in the London Haymarket Theatre as Blanche Haye in Robertson's comedy of Ours on the evening of January 18th, 1881. Her first appearance in America was on November 6th, 1882, in the play of the Unequal Match; the critics on both sides of the water agreed in those earlier performances that Mrs. Langtry possessed the dramatic instinct to a large degree and that with hard study she might rank in time with the leading actresses of the day; the following season—1882-3—she appeared in several new characters, and was conceded to have made vast improvements in her art. In the present season she has risen to be one of the best paying attractions in the list of theatricals, her earnings in this country alone having run into the hundreds of thousands.

After witnessing her performance of Galatea, the verdict of Salt Lake will be that of most other cities where she has performed—that Mrs. Langtry's chief charm lies in the fact that she is a beautiful woman, and that her ability as an actress is the secondary point in her list of attractions; there is no doubt that she has made Gilbert's heroine so important a one in her impersonations because of the fact that it requires personal loveliness to fill the creation; and feeling sure of that qualification, she also felt that any shortcomings in the action of the part would be the more likely pardoned. As the statue of Galatea, before the Sculptor's prayer had called down the breath of life to her lips, she was last evening indeed rarely beautiful. And as the luckless maid, bewildered amid the new customs of a strange world, she carried with her gracefulness and beauty that entirely charmed every beholder. Her acting shows the results of careful coaching and severe study, but one can never forget, with all her loveliness of appearance and richness of voice, that she is simply echoing the instruction she has received. As yet she only acts, she does not feel. The character of Galatea is one that calls for the most utter ingenueness, innocence and simplicity. Mary Anderson is probably its best exponent in these regards. Those who have seen her in the position thought last night that Langtry modelled after her, but that there was a wide world yet separating the two conceptions; to our mind Mrs. Langtry appeared to best advantage in the few scenes that afforded any chance for impassioned utterance, as notably in the appeal to Pygmalion; the audience, though not loudly demonstrative, were very kindly disposed, and besides demanding a recall at the end of act first, paid the star a complimentary ovation or never accorded in this city of bringing her before the footlights after the curtain went down on the last act. The support was fairly efficient in all respects, though not such as Rhea gave us during the past week; the company has evidently been carefully selected to prevent their dimming the lustre of the star by their brightness; Mr. Caine's Pygmalion was manly and hand-ome, but somewhat stiff and lacking in spirit; the Cynisca of Miss Houston was not strong enough to meet the requirements of the part—it is the only part in the piece needing fire and declamation. The comedy of Mr. Everill was one of the best bits in the support. To-night we shall have an opportunity for beholding Mrs. Langtry in something of an entirely different line—as Julia, in the Hunchback. The possibilities of the part afford a wider and a stronger range for an actress than the character of last evening, and the public will no doubt be equally curious to see her in another field.

ANOTHER OPINION.

Mrs. Langtry made her first appearance before a Salt Lake audience in Gilbert's allegorical and satirical romance, Pygmalion and Galatea. The audience were expecting a beautiful vision of female loveliness, and were not entirely disappointed, for Mrs. Langtry is certainly a very handsome woman. In one respect, however, they were somewhat disappointed; they supposed from what they had heard that the lady's claims to personal attractions, whereas they found her possessed of many of the arts and most of the artfulness of the actress of greater experience. She shows decided dramatic ability, her principal fault being that a certain staginess, which time will dissipate, appears throughout. Her figure is almost perfect, the outlines being finely rounded and the profile decidedly Grecian, while the neck and bust are as splendidly executed by nature as though they were the work of a sculptor.

The audience was very large and the applause at times was quite enthusiastic. At the end of the first act Mrs. Langtry appeared before the curtain in response to loud calls, and was made the recipient of what might be considered an ovation. She modestly bowed in acknowledgment of the praises of her audience, and altogether made an excellent impression, and Salt Lake audiences will not join in the utterances of a few papers and people elsewhere that the lady is playing on her beauty alone.

To-night Mrs. Langtry appears as Julia, in the Hunchback.

He Takes a Drive.

On Monday last a gentleman who used to wash carriages for Mulloy & Paul, hired a horse and buggy from their stables to go to the races of the Salt Lake Driving Park Association. From present appearances, however, it would seem that he had gone to attend some other races, and will now engage in a race himself with the officers of the law. He sent word from the Warm Springs that he would not be back till after midnight on Monday. It is now some forty-eight hours after that midnight and he is still absent. Naturally Mulloy & Paul feel a little bit anxious, and are putting the bounds of the law on their patron's track. He was known to them as George H. Kellogg, but has such a plentiful supply of aliases that it is difficult to say which one he would answer to if asked by an officer. He is a large man, about 6 feet 2 inches tall, and 220 lbs. in weight. He is light complexioned, with short hair and smooth face, and about 30 years old. The outfit he has got away with is a bay horse with white face and white hind feet, and a Studebaker end spring top buggy, not quite new. Look out for him and report.

Absalom Yates Killed.

We were informed by telephone from Capt. Dourris of Garfield, last night, that Absalom Yates, an old and respected citizen of E. T. City, had been killed at 4:30 p.m. in Big Canyon by a log rolling upon him. Mr. Yates had resided in Twelve County for twenty years, and was esteemed by everybody who knew him.

There was a small boy with Mr. Yates at the time the log rolled on him, but he was not strong enough to move the log and ran down the canyon for help. By the time he returned Mr. Yates was unconscious, and though he revived for a time, he finally succumbed to his injuries.

Deseret Hospital Notice.

We beg leave to inform the members of the Deseret Hospital Association that this is the commencement of the third year; those who have not paid the annual fee for 1883 will please forward $1 each as soon as possible.

At the organization it was arranged that the initiation fees be paid yearly in advance; the membership fee for 1884 is therefore due, and we can assure the members the money will be very acceptable.

A number of gentlemen have expressed a wish to be identified with the association, and some have already joined and paid the initiation fee. Ladies, also, who feel interested in this benevolent association, are cordially invited to become members. Much good has been accomplished by the institution, and it is very desirable that its sphere of usefulness should be enlarged.

Races on the Fourth.

July 4th promises to be a gala day at the race course and all lovers of the sport will be more than satisfied. The Salt Lake Driving Park Association are already engaged preparing an attractive programme for that day, and thirty horses are daily being worked in order to have them in good trim and readiness for the splendid work that will be expected of them, and no doubt they will show themselves at their best; everything will go off in such a lively and enjoyable manner as to leave none dissatisfied, but all declare it the liveliest and most interesting day of the season.

There is some talk on the street of a couple of matches, one between E. N. Baekin's bay gelding and C. W. Carrington's Rarus Jr.; also between Baekin's black gelding and Rarus Jr. Carrington says he is ready for the races and only hopes the other parties mean business.

The Circus.

Cole's circus gave its concluding performance in this city last evening to a small audience. The attendance at these exhibitions has been something wonderful, and figures among the great successes of the period hereabout. The street parade was one of the largest and most gorgeous ever seen here, and the performances of the Arabs, the high bicycles, the ground and lofty tumbling, the bareback riding, the wonderful "human fly" act, and the lion mastery of George Conklin are the best of their kind ever exhibited in Salt Lake. The long-haired Sutherland sisters must be seen to be appreciated. They are certainly wonderful illustrations as they do how munificently nature sometimes endows women with the glory of hair.

Altogether the show is one of the best that ever traveled, and must be held to be thoroughly comprehended.

Change in Date of Sailing.

It has been found necessary to make another change in the published date of sailing. The third company of this season's emigration will leave Liverpool on Saturday, the 14th of June, per the SS. Arizona, instead of on the 11th, as previously announced. — Millennial Star.

ZUFFA, THE BRIGAND.

The celebrated brigand Zuffa, of Castel Gnefio, Bologna, died recently in the State prison of Ancona, where he had been confined for the last twenty-eight years. He was sentenced for life in 1856 for many crimes. He was one of the most daring companions of Passatore, the terror of the Romagna forty years ago. Among the exploits by which Zuffa and his companions made themselves notorious was the following:

One night they entered the city of Forlimpopoli while a performance was going on at the theatre. They went behind the scenes, and leveling their carbines at the audience, announcing that every door was closed and guarded by a brigand, and that the audience had better give up at once all their valuables. One of the gang went around with a bag collecting jewels and money, and then the band leisurely retired.

Is it Suicide?

Yesterday a valise was brought to police headquarters by the party who found it in a garden in the southern portion of the Thirteenth ward. The valise was opened and found to contain a few books, an album, a telegraphic instrument, a few other trifling articles, and a letter without date. The said letter was expected to give some clue to owner of the baggage. Its purport is that the writer has grown weary of life and intends to end her existence by self-murder. She bids farewell to her mother and other members of the family, laments the errors of her life, alludes to a lover she has lost, says she is sorry to rob her children of their mother, but declares that she can no longer endure the troubles that crowd upon her pathway, and intimates her determination to die at once.

The letter is signed Nettie Vanderhoop. In some of the books are the names Nettie Cooley, of G. Antville, Wellington Vanderhoop and other names, which seem to indicate that the writer of the letter was Nettie Cooley before she became, either by law or in fact, Mrs. Vanderhoop. The police had no clue whatever to the owner of the valise, and could get no trace of any such person yesterday. It is hoped that this notice may lead to some information on the subject.

Supreme Court.

On motion of Arthur Brown, and on it satisfactorily appearing that Robert S. Spence, of Paris, Idaho, the said R. S. Spence was admitted to the bar of this court as an attorney and counselor-at-law.

The consideration of new rules of court heretofore presented is postponed till the 13th of June.

People, respondents, vs. Patrick Callaghan, appellant, Second District. This cause coming on regularly for hearing was argued by Mr. Brown for appellant.

The People, respondents, vs. Frederick Hopt, appellant. On affidavit this day filed, and on a certified copy of the writ of error attached thereto, a motion was made by Hopt's counsel to stay execution; not allowed, on the ground of no jurisdiction, the case having been transferred to the United States Supreme Court.

People vs. Patrick Callaghan, Second District. Cause argued by Arthur Brown for appellant.

MARRIED.

FALLIGAN—BUZZARD.—In this city, June 11th, 1884, George Falligan to Miss Alwidia Buzzard, both of Butte, M. T.

[The bride is a charming lady, who enjoyed the enviable distinction of being the belle of Butte. Mr. Falligan is well and favorably known in Salt Lake, where he was for some time engaged in business, being proprietor of the Empire Meat Market. Some years ago he went to Montana, where until recently he was in the stock-raising industry, being eminently successful. He lately disposed of his entire cattle interest, and as will be seen by the above notice has concluded to devote himself to pleasanter pursuits. THE HERALD's best wishes go with the happy couple.]

WILLIAM STRONG, of Company E, Mormon Battalion, can hear of something to his advantage by applying to Dr. Taggart, No. 78 W., Second South street, Salt Lake City.
